Recently, while I was having a tranquil lunch at KitKat, an enigmatic individual approached me, asserting that he possessed a video from my past that he suggested could jeopardize my reputation on social media as a founding member of the Palmdale Chapter of the formerly banned Jesuits of Truth.
It appears that he intended to leverage this video for blackmail purposes, potentially to establish and fund another Anti-Emil Hate Group, or to elevate his own profile as the latest "Woke Gunslinger" while generating attention for his "DEI Forever" podcast.
He asserted with great fervor that this video could unveil a scandal of greater magnitude than Watergate (My apologies to "This is worse than Watergate" Carl ; those were his words, not mine!). He further remarked, "The implications of its release... are beyond my comprehension."

Unbeknownst to him, the video was a component of an unsuccessful marketing campaign for a Mariachi Band that focused on corporate events.

My initial idea may not be entirely unique, as it is influenced by the working-class anthem "Take this job and shove it!" by the late Johnny Paycheck, and reflected upon my desire to express a bold statement of resistance after losing my corporate position.

Rather than departing the premises under the supervision of security personnel or exiting in a demoralized manner with a small box of personal belongings, I opted to engage a spirited Mariachi band to accompany me in a celebratory procession to my soon-to-be former supervisor's office. This final encounter served as an opportunity to enlighten him on the effective use of action verbs and their potential applications in his own professional conduct.

Even now, I am regarded by the remaining workers as a local, street-fighting hero, often spoken of in hushed tones. They appreciate my discerning taste for having the band perform a soulful selection of the iconic hits of the late Al Green during the firing event.

Motivated by a desire to earn USD, I considered the prospect of becoming the band's new manager to delve into the unexplored realm of corporate performances.

Unfortunately, the arrangement collapsed due to several restraining orders that barred me from being within 500 feet of any government facility. Additionally, the band realized, following the release of the video in question, that they could secure more lucrative opportunities independently, thus eliminating the need to pay my 10% commission.

My efforts to clarify to my blackmailer that the video was already publicly accessible were futile.

Although a temporary injunction from the Southern District Courts prohibited its online dissemination, this reality appeared to elude him. Perhaps he was unwilling to accept that my social credit score stands at nearly minus 60,000 credits, indicating that I am effectively beyond the point of being canceled.

Ultimately, he seemed completely oblivious to the truth.
I took the initiative to independently re-release the video, aiming to rejuvenate the project. It will be interesting to observe the outcome, particularly in light of his extensive promotional efforts across social media.
I am curious whether he might retaliate with legal action regarding his promotion of this endeavor.
